Postpartum Headaches: Causes, symptoms, diagnosis and treatment headaches during pregnancy and postpartum, which are relieved by general measures and simple pain killers. However, persistent headaches need a closer evaluation and management. What causes postpartum headaches?

They occur within 6 weeks following delivery, primarily due to stress, shifting hormone levels, and migraine. Breast feeding can cause lack of sleep, dehydration, emotional and physical fatigue causing headaches. This can be corrected with diet and oral fluids.

Postpartum headaches can also result from secondary conditions like hypertension / preeclampsia, certain drugs, postdural tap due to epidural analgesic, brain haemorrhage, infections like meningitis, cerebral venous thrombosis and caffeine withdrawal. Headache due to high blood pressure occurs on both sides of head, and worsens with physical activity. They cause vision changes, shortness of breath and decreased urine. How are they treated? Tension and migraine headaches are treated by simple analgesics which are safe during breast feeding. Secondary headaches require consultation with specialist doctors for further inves-

How are post-delivery headaches prevented? a) Drink atleast 3-4 litres of liquid/day

b) Eat nutritious healthy food c) Take adequate rest & relax

What are postdural puncture headaches?

These headaches occur after epidurals (pain relief injections). If there is an accidental puncture of brain matter with epidural needle, 70-80% of patients develop headache. The ache is usually in front and back regions of head and neck. It worsens on standing and typically develops 24-48 hrs post puncture. Women often recover in 7-10 days headaches? Post-delivery if women complain of limb weakness or receive an abnormal neurological examination, it may be central venous thrombosis, a serious problem. If headaches change with posture, it could be due to change in CSF fluid pressure. Headache awakening the patient can be migraine.

What is cerebral venous thrombosis (CVT)? This occurs due to blood clot in brain vessels, usually the cortical veins. It is experienced during pregnancy or first four weeks post-delivery especially amongst those who had c-section. anaemia or infections. The life threatening condition can lead to convulsions and altered consciousness. CVT is diagnosed with MRV. A neurologist may advise LMWH injections for six months. It can affect next pregnancy also.

When you should see a doctor? Consult a doctor for severe headache with fever, nausea, vomiting, visual changes, cognitive problems and when the ache changes with posture or wakes you from sleep.

How to overcome tubal factor infertility structures measuring about 10 centimetres that play a pivotal role in fertility. The fimbrial end of the tube picks up the egg from the ovary and transports it to a part called ampulla where the egg meets the sperm and fertilisation occurs and the fertilised zygote is transported to the uterus. Any impedance to this either in the form of a blockade or any functional disruption results in tubal factor infertility. Tubal factor accounts for 25-50 %

of female factor infertility. CAUSES

1. Infection of tubes (salpingitis) is one of the most common causes of tubal factor infertility. It can occur due to sexually transmitted diseases, genital tuberculosis etc.

2. Peritubal adhesions caused by conditions like endometriosis or previous surgeries leading to impairment of tubal function

3. Pelvic inflammatory diseases 4. Intrauterine adhesions, cornual sub-mucous fibroid or polyps 5. Ectopic pregnancies managed medically or surgically

6. Tubal sterilisation (family planning

Fallopian tubes are not visible on ultrasonography unless it is filled with fluid (hydrosalpinx) or pus (pyosalpinx) or swollen due to any cause.

Despite advancements in imaging tools HSG (hysterosalpingography) is still the standard first line screening test for evaluation of tubal infertility, as it is less invasive, and is performed between day 7-10 of a women's cycle. Apart from diagnosing tubal blocks, it has an additional advantage of tubal flushing which increases pregnancy chances.
